

THE HEROIC DEAD.

Fourteen and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the purpose that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The great men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth. —LINCOLN.

This should be no year for bolters. No faction in New York should bolt the majority, and no faction should bolt the Republican administration.

In discussing the senatorial question in New York the country has lost sight of "me too" Platt. It never did pay to throw off one's manhood and become a tag to a coat-tail.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, which has clung to Mr. Conkling with a tenacity unequalled by any other paper in the city of New York, now admits that Mr. Conkling made a mistake in resigning. It urges his re-election, but confesses that it was a blunder to take the course he did.

President Garfield says he will entertain no personal hostility toward Mr. Conkling, and he doesn't want any of the friends of the administration to have personal quarrels with the friends of Mr. Conkling. He acknowledges the Senator's brilliant abilities, his influence in Congress as well as in New York, and the substantial good service he has rendered the Republican party.

Four hundred and fifty years ago today, Jeanne Darc paid the penalty of her loyalty to her religion, to her king, and to her country, by death at the stake. Not content with committing her body to the flames, her executioners cast her ashes into the Seine. Little did they think her sacred dust, borne onward to the sea, would kiss the shores of many a far-off land and spring to life within the breast of millions who, like her, would die the martyr's death for native land. Ignorant, poor, and lowly—by thy heroic faith, thou hast won a place among the great—thou noble Maid of Orleans.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin once said in a decision that, "through the counties the sovereignty performs many of its most important acts. Its judicial acts are exercised through the instrumentality of the counties." It also said, in an important opinion rendered some years ago: "At the county seat of each county the State through its proper officers administers justice." The question is to what constitutes a county seat, or seat of justice, is of considerable consequence, and in locating the municipal court, the common council can not afford to make any mistake or to run any risk. It should be held where the law says courts of record must be held—at the seat of justice and not away from it. A little good judgment in this matter may save the county some trouble.

"Flag of the free heart's only home,
By angel hands to valor given,
Thy stars have lit the welkin done,
And all thy hues were born in Heaven."

In almost every city in this vast country, there is something being done to cherish the sentiment so well expressed by a Greek orator, more than two thousand years ago, when he said: "It is a debt of justice that superior honors should be paid to those who die and fight for their country." It is the greatest sacrifice which a man can render his country, and those who fell in the greatest and fiercest conflict for human liberty and National unity the world ever saw, will be kindly remembered this day, and the final resting places strewed with flowers. The dead and living soldiers of the war fought to preserve their country. The Nation has crossed the Red Sea. The Freedom for which they fought and sacrificed their lives, has been gained. The constitution has been saved. The Nation has been preserved. The chains which bound four million slaves in bondage, have been broken, and to-day the graves which hold those who fell in the deadly conflict for these blessings are being tenderly remembered. Our National worship, extending sympathy and protection to every creed, consecrates at all altars—the love of one God, one Union, a common destiny, and one flag.

There seems to be a change, or signs of a change, in the fortunes of Mr. Conkling at Albany. A majority of the Republicans in the Legislature refuse to go into a caucus, and this will throw the contest out of the caucus into the Legislature. At the counting of noses, there were 58 administration members, 40 Conkling men, and seven on the fence. Judge Robertson says these figures are absolutely correct, and he gave it as his opinion that the number of administration men would be raised to 65 or 70 by Wednesday. There is a rumor in which a great deal of credence is placed, that when the contest finally comes there will be no bitter hostility between the parties, and that an amicable agreement will be made by the friends of the various candidates. But in this calculation, both Conkling and Platt are counted out. It is thought that an administration man will be selected for one and a Conkling man for the other. But as to this, the reports are conflicting, and nothing definite can be learned till balloting commences. A careful survey of the field, however, would lead to the conviction that Mr. Conkling's chances are not so good as they were a week ago.

THE ALBANY FIGHT.

"That Man from Maine" is the Issue with the Conkling Men.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The Tribune says ex-Senators Conkling and Platt spent another quiet day in the city today, and returned in the evening by boat to Albany, to resume their efforts to secure re-election to the Senate. To their friends they professed "to have no fears of the result." Mr. Conkling had few callers yesterday. He rose late, lunched with Mr. Platt and remained in the hotel until 5:30 p. m., when they started with A. B. Johnson and Mr. Platt for the ferryboat. The hotel was deserted of politicians during the day. E. W. Stoughton and two or three others called on Conkling, but they refused to give any opinion for publication in regard to the contest.

A member of the State committee living outside of the city, who called upon Conkling yesterday and afterward talked with a Tribune reporter, was bitter in denunciations of "that man from Maine." This committee man said: "This fight is not against Garfield, but against that man from Maine." Garfield is all right. The question with Conkling is whether he shall allow Blaine to manage the party in this State. Blaine has been able to carry Maine in September, and then rush over here and interfere with Conkling, and then go to Pennsylvania and make speeches and attempt to undermine Cameron, and again, in Illinois, did the same thing with Logan. He did succeed in defeating Carpenter in Wisconsin, and he interfered in the same way with Morton, of Indiana. Conkling don't go about to interfere with the leaders of other States under the pretense of making campaign speeches. He has always avoided going out of his own State. Now this thing must be decided at Albany as to whether Blaine is to be allowed to govern in this State as in Maine.

The question whether or not the legislature be compelled to remain in session and ballot continuously for senators until successors to Conkling and Platt are chosen was discussed yesterday by an adherent of the administration and the ex-Senator. In the case of dead-lock two courses seem open: One is for the legislature to adjourn, with the understanding that the governor will call an extra session late in September or early in October, when balloting may be resumed, or to have no extra session, and allow the vacancies to be filled by the Legislature to be chosen in November. The danger of the latter course is that in many Assembly and Senatorial districts there would be two sets of Republican candidates, and the next Legislature might be Democratic. This is a contingency which administration members do not like to contemplate, and it is doubtful if they agree to adjourn unless they have assurance from the Governor that he will call them together again. Suggestions that a recess shall be taken for three or four months is met by the statement that it would endanger the legality of the election of Senators, and this is another risk that it is not deemed advisable to take.

A speech from Conkling is expected during this week.

ALLEGED BIGAMY.

A Fond du Lac Man with a Wife and Five Children Arrested for Bigamy in Georgia.

ATLANTA, May 29.—About one week ago John W. Follansbee, of this city, wedded Miss Hunter, and amiable and pretty girl, in the village of Decatur, six miles distant. Her parents bitterly opposed the match. Follansbee settled here in 1875, and while engaged with the house of Langley & Robinson, Decatur street, stated to his companions that he was a married man hailing from Fond du Lac, Wis. He was discharged by Langley & Robinson, and removed to Cherokee county, this State, where he lived until last January, when he entered the government service, with headquarters at Decatur. Here his eyes first fell upon the charming Miss Hunter, and after laying brief siege to her heart he won the prize. J. T. Buchanan, the station-house keeper here, knew Follansbee while he was in the employ of Langley & Robinson, and when he read the marriage announcement reflected that he had heard Follansbee remark he was a married man. By communicating with certain parties in Fond du Lac, Buchanan got the proof that Follansbee had a wife there; so yesterday Buchanan got out a warrant for his man for bigamy, and proceeded to his boarding house. Follansbee and bride No. 2 were not in, and Buchanan stayed until 2 o'clock this morning, when the unsuspecting pair returned. Buchanan at once said: "You are my prisoner, sir." The lady said: "Why do you arrest him?" when Buchanan replied: "Mr. Follansbee can tell." The lady then asked her husband why he was arrested, but he declined to say. Buchanan answered for him, saying that Follansbee had a wife and five children in Fond du Lac. The news rendered the young woman speechless for a few moments, when she regained the use of her tongue and bitterly denounced Follansbee; but when the officer started off with him, woman-like, she cried and implored him to free him. Follansbee is a handsome man, 45 years old. He is well educated. He was perfectly cool, and told his wife that all would be well. Miss Hunter is the daughter of James Hunter, sheriff of DeKalb county. She is 19, and numbers among her relatives some of Georgia's best blood.

LA CROSSE, May 28.—The rains of the past few days have been very beneficial to growing crops in this vicinity and Southern Minnesota and Dakota. The rain has been very general in the places mentioned. Everything at this time is in excellent condition, and even farmers who have raised poor crops in the past few years say that things never looked better and more favorable. Corn is now all planted and doing well.

APPOINTMENTS.

MADISON, May 28.—Governor Smith today made the following appointments: Lewis C. Thompson, of Douglas county, to be lumber inspector of the Thirteenth district, vice George W. Perry, resigned; Charles E. Ahnworth to be district attorney of Jackson county, vice E. C. Wood, resigned; Michael Mulligan to be county judge of Trempealeau county, vice Seth Mills, resigned; James Morse to be county judge of Langlade county, vice Lewis Motzfeldt, resigned. The two appointees to positions of county judges were elected this spring to take office on the 1st of next January.

ATTEMPT TO BREAK JAIL.

ELKHORN, May 29.—A jail escape was attempted here last night, a prisoner named Hineburg knocking down Under Sheriff Lyon while the officer was locking him in a cell for the night. The prisoner's purpose was to secure the jail keys and make his escape through the main entrance. Both were badly mauled in the struggle, but Hineburg was finally secured and locked up.

CHICAGO GOSSIP.

From our Regular Correspondent.
CHICAGO, May 28.—No city in the country is more dusty than this, during the hot, dry summer weather. More especially is this the case in the latter part of May. Pounding out of carpets &c., and the yearly sweeping out of residences, make clouds of dust in every direction, which seems to settle down on all butcher's wagons in passing, with their heavy loads of unprotected quarters of beef, mutton, pork, &c.

The workman I alluded to a short time ago, who discovered some gold-bearing quartz near the city limits, whose name by the way, is James Anderson, and resides on West Randolph street, secured the services of a competent prospector on last Wednesday, and they have both been busily engaged ever since, in investigating the ground. In one instance, they dug to a depth of six feet near the spot where the gold was first discovered, and struck a ledge of very hard rock, which an assayer afterward would yield from $200 to $700 of pure gold to the ton. Some distance farther, they dug nine feet through soil, hard clay, and sand, when the same ledge came to view, disclosing quartz of a richer quality. The spot where the first few dollars worth was found, is rock of the same kind, very hard and granitic. The discoverer endeavored to keep it a secret, but it eventually leaked out, through the aid of your correspondent, and he will most thoroughly investigate it, for all it is worth. To me, the quartz on the ground looked very peculiar; some of it glistened like diamonds, while other pieces were of a dull grey color. We are more anxiously awaiting future developments and thorough assays of the ore.

Coal is arriving in large quantities—both by lake and railroad. A retail dealer sold a ton of very fine coal to a citizen on Monday last, of Briar Hill, and his wife on breaking a lump discovered a large diamond firmly embedded in it. It is the size of a very large pea, and valued at $840. One of our jewelers has it in his possession, and will cut it.

Lumber is coming in freely, but of poor quality so far. It is very firm in price, but it is thought that a material decline will soon take place. The demand from the country is very large at present, and the city demand exceeds any previous year. Good common goods are worth from $12 to $14 per thousand feet.

Crops in the vicinity of Chicago look well notwithstanding the extremely dry weather. Farmers predict an abundant harvest of everything, and are feeling very happy and hopeful.

Cattle are arriving in large droves, and the prices are good. Hogs coming in appear in excellent condition, and find a ready sale at good figures.

Wheat is steadily advancing in price, and all kinds of grain is on the rise. Many public buildings and banks, &c., will be closed on Monday—decoration day, and the graves of our dead heroes honored.

The Girl Graduate.

Brooklyn Eagle.

"Could I see the editor?" she asked, looking around for him and wondering what was going on under his table.

"Eh! yes, I'm him," responded the editor, evolving himself and slipping a cork into his vest pocket. "What can I do for you?"

"I am a student in Packer institute," responded the blushing damsel, "and I have written a little article on 'Our School Days' which I would like to have published in the Brooklyn Eagle if you think it good enough."

"Certainly," replied the editor, gazing in unconscious admiration upon the beautiful face before him. "Does it commence 'Our school days' how the world lingers in sweet memories on the strings of memory?" "It is that the way it runs."

"Why, yes," responded the beaming girl. "Then it goes on, 'How we looked forward from them to the time when we shall look back to them!' How did you know?"

"Never mind," said the editor, with the engaging smile which had endeared him to the citizens of Brooklyn. "After that comes, 'So sunshiny! So gilded with the pleasures that make youth happy, they have down into the immutable past and come to us in after life only as echoes in the caves of sweet recollections.' Isn't that it?"

"That certainly is," answered the astonished girl, radiant with delight. "How could you know what I had written?"

"Then it changes from the pianissimo and becomes more tender: 'The shadows gather around our path. The roses of friendship are withering, but may we not hope that they will bloom again as we remember the affection that bound us here and made'—"

"No, you're wrong there," and the soft eyes looked disappointed.

"Is it 'Hope on, hope ever?' asked the editor.

"That comes in further on. You had it nearly right. It is 'The dim shadows close around us. The flowers of friendship are sleeping, but not withered, and will bloom again in the affectionate remembrance of the chains that bound us so lightly.'"

"Strange that I should have made that mistake," said the editor, musingly. "I never missed on one before. From there it goes, 'Schoolmates, let us live so that all our days shall be as radiant as those we have known here, and may we pluck happiness from every bush, forgetting never that the thorns are below the roses, and plucking those whose hands are bruised in the march through life.'"

"That's it," exclaimed the delighted girl. "And then comes 'Hope on, hope ever.'"

"Sure's you're born!" cried the editor, blushing with pleasure, and once more on the right track. "Then it runs: 'And as for you, teacher dear!'"

"Yes, yes, you're right," giggled the girl. "I can't see how you found me out! Would you like to print it?" and her face assumed an anxious shade.

"Certainly responded the editor. 'I'll say it's by the most promising lady in Brooklyn, the daughter of an esteemed citizen, and a lady who has already taken a high social rank.'"

"That finishes the school commencement at one swoop," sighed the editor gloomily, as the fair vision floated out. "Can't see how I made that blunder about the shadows and roses and friendship."

Either I'm old or some of these girls have struck out something original. Here Swipes, tell the foreman to put this slush in the next fax sales supplement," and the editor felt in his hair for the cork, and wondered what had happened to his memory.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

The following statement of William J. Conghlin, of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the fall of 1876, I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs. I laughed at my friends, thinking that my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when, to my surprise and gratification, I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have the past three years."

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with Disordered Lungs will be induced to try Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared, and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists.

A Duellist's Experience.

BARON DE SAN MALATA, a Sicilian and a noted duellist, has recently gone to Paris to find a test of his skill as a combatant. He has fought forty duels, but in none has been the challenger. It is told of him that during a heated political canvass, in the course of a discussion in a public square with a first cousin, the latter called him by some opprobrious epithet. The Baron replied: "You are a coward!" The cousin answered: "Will you repeat that in five minutes?" "Assuredly," The cousin went home, and returned with a revolver in his hand. The Baron went up to him and said: "Guiseppa, seg here! That revolver don't suit your hand; the stock never was made for you; for the life of you, you could not use that pistol." As he ceased to speak he spat in his cousin's face. The suddenness and strangeness of this speech and attack so bewildered the cousin that he neither said nor did anything. The Baron spat in his face again, and then interfered. The cousin challenged the Baron. The eve of the duel the Baron's aunt, who knew what an expert swordsman he was, begged him to spare her son's life. He replied, "Guiseppa shall return from the field without even a scratch." The duel took place. The cousin attacked furiously. The Baron only parried. At last he turned his head and looked at his seconds until his adversary became so weak that he could no longer hold his sword, when the seconds interfered and ended the duel. At another time he was challenged by the best broadswordman in Sicily, while he himself was not skillful with this weapon. The broadsword was selected by the seconds. On the field the Baron took his sword in both hands and rushed upon his adversary, using his weapon as if it were a club. His adversary retreated. They were put in position; at the first pass the Baron's sword broke within eight inches of the hilt; his adversary kept on; the seconds did not interfere. The Baron became furious, rushed on his adversary, wounded him; then turned on the seconds and wounded every one of them, beginning with his own.

VICTOR HUGO contributed a thousand francs for the benefit of the anarchist communists who recently returned to Paris from New Caledonia. The gift was accompanied by the following note: "I have a thousand francs. I send them to the anarchist. The year should be begun with a thought for those who suffer."

YON MORS, the great Belgian horticulturist, is reported as saying grates came into his hands after being three years in the mails, which he gruffed, and they grew.

H. A. PATTERSON, P. M.

Some Chinese Servants.

AH GIM did his work in the deft quick way that is characteristic of the Chinese servant, at the same time adding many little refinements of his own. He always kept a newly-plucked rooster in a glass on the shelf of his kitchen sink, taking whiffs of its fragrance as he washed his dishes. The bowls of the kerosene lamps had rose-leaves strewn in them, and all the vases in the house were kept filled with fresh flowers and water.

Like most fine gentlemen, Ah Gim had superlative feelings which were easily wounded. Being too dignified to mention the fact that he was a Chinese, and all the injured his feelings, and yet desirous that we should not languish in ignorance, he had a curious custom, coming sometimes at awkward seasons, of flattening his face against the wall and remaining rigid for a longer or shorter period, according to the turpitude of the offense. When this happened during the preparation of dinner or while waiting upon the table, it was productive of unpleasant feeling. I said nothing at first, but waited until Ah Gim wanted to go to the city to do some shopping. As usual, he came asking me to accompany him, at which I dashed myself against the wall and said nothing. The subject was dropped at once, and Ah Gim stole sheepishly away. After several days he took courage to speak again about going to the city, and again I promptly and silently took his position against the wall. This went on until he voluntarily promised to abstain from all flattening and sulks in the future, and I had no more trouble with him on that score.

My next venture was called Ah Sin, a big, dapper lad of fourteen, of a fascinating turn of mind and a merry, most musical laugh.

Sam had a pony. It had long been a dream of Ah Sin's to have a ride behind Sam on his "little horse." I gave them permission one morning to go riding double to gather wild strawberries in the fields, Ah Sin providing himself with a grain sack to carry the fruit in. Late in the afternoon I found him hiding the empty sack. He was greatly mortified at having made such a public display which ended in so poor a fiasco, for they had not found a single berry, and, as Ah Sin confessed to me a few days after, horseback-riding was not all his fancy had painted it. "Little horse," said he, "jump, jump, jump; I jump, jump, jump; one week alone stand up; no can sit down."

At this time there were two young ladies in the family. Naturally, gentlemen from the city were fond of hunting in the hills about Monterey. We found afterward that all strangers were met by confidential disclosures from the China boy as to the state of the young ladies' affections.

"The Chinese boy," said the young ladies, "is a wally man, like a mallee like Melican painter man; pretty soon she mally him, so she mally you. Misses Nelly she mally Spanish man; bym by she get plenty key, lockee, lockee door; tie up bread alley same senora." His delicacy in the presence of the supposed lovers was extreme. If the exigencies of the situation forced him to turn his body toward them it moved under his head as though working upon a pivot, so that the queue invariably faced them.

See Yung had probably brought some malarial in his system from the Carmelo Valley. He was taken with an ague-chill. As soon as the fever went down, I gave him a large quinine pill which I desired him to take.

"Hym-by," was his reply.
A few minutes after I heard a rustle on the stairs. I was just in time to prevent See Yung's precipitate retreat; the sight of "Melican man's medicine" had frightened him more than the chill. He still held the pill in his hand. I sternly ordered him to sit in a chair and open his mouth. In a tremor of agitation he dropped into the chair, threw back his head, and opened his mouth; down went the pill. He opened his eyes, gave me one reproachful glance, and fled the house. The second day after he walked through the kitchen and into my room, seated himself upon the same spot, in the same chair, and solemnly said, "Welly good pill; like he had more alleo same," threw back his head, shut his eyes and opened his mouth. I had mislaid the box, and hunted some time before I found it, but See Yung never moved a muscle until I popped the pill down his throat, when he said, "Thank you," and went about his work again. He doubtless looked upon the magical pill as a preservative of health as well as a cure for disease, for he took position at the same hour every day and waited for the pill until I showed him the empty box, which he viewed with the deepest dejection.—Lippincott's Magazine.

EX-QUEEN ISABELLA and her beautiful Spanish women have been one of the chief attractions at the Paris Grand Opera this winter. Her ex-Majesty dresses in blue satin, always displays a large number of diamonds and feathers, and appears to gain ten pounds a week.

A Visit to the Catacombs of Paris.

ANKERS are no match for Frenchmen in practical cleverness. The Parisians make even their bones pay. I mean their own bones. When they are through with them, and they have gone through the formality of a few years' burial, they are dug up, put in the catacombs and made a show of to visitors. The show is free, but a visit keeps thousands of strangers a day longer in Paris, and this is where the profit comes in and is wrung out by these clever people. So the bones of the grand and great-great-greats of the present generation of Frenchmen, as they lie there in great heaps under ground, with the rats scuttling through them, are still useful. I went down among these thousands and thousands of dead men and women in company with some 300 living men and women of all tongues and countries. It was on Thursday—a visiting day. The other "visiting day" is Saturday. The entrance to these tombs is at the Boulevard d'Enfer, or Boulevard of Hell, if you want the English of it. Preparatory to the descent into the tombs each one of the awaiting three hundred bought a candle. The end of each candle was let into a square bit of pasteboard which protected one's dress from the drippings. There were 200 candles too many, for one light to every three visitors is sufficient. But we did not know this, and the French were not going to tell us and spoil the sale of 200 candles. Having bought the candles we, the 300, were in a bare yard partly inclosed by high board fences. We waited at least two hours. Then we went down ninety-two steep stone steps and traversed a long passage-way underground without meeting any bones. This we tramped a long time in single file without seeing a bone. On the rocky ceiling was a continuous black mass. This, followed, would lead to either entrance and so afford any laggard a sure guidance. Underneath, the mud in places was greasy in consistency, tarry in tenacity and whitish in color. It was the gypsum mud abounding in Paris. It jumped on our shoes and gradually overspread our garments, which broke out in irregular white patches.

At last the long-wished-for piles of disjointed skeletons came into view. They were "faced" with skulls and the larger bones in front, as regularly as a pile of bricks. But behind all was osseous confusion. Rib bones and skulls, tibias and fibulas, backbone joints and breast bones, bits of skulls with moldy hair attached, leg bones and arm bones, all piled together by the ton, by the million, all in the dull, rusty color which bones assume in damp places. Here were skulls once covered by the bonnet rouge. Here were fleshless jaws which had howled at Louis XVI. and roared the first Marseillaise; ribs of aristocrats, leg bones of commoners, foot of fisherman, and all the interiors filled with the little feet and finger bones of the thousands of past and forgotten Jeans and Jacques, Jeanettes, Josephines, Paulines, Blanches and Louise, who lived and suffered and enjoyed and died generations ago—all flung here, a horrible kaleidoscopic mass of disjointed skeletons—like the rusty wheels and springs of ten thousand old clocks piled in a heap. These heaps were dated 1793, 1806 and 1814 and upward. The inscriptions upon the various piles were in some cases from Scripture, in others from Rousseau and other writers. The older the sepulture the more frequent and voluminous the epitaphs. For the present they seemed content without a line. Perhaps they deem that bones now carry their own sermon. A man ahead of me busied himself with pulling out the teeth of every skull he could reach. He may have been a dentist after new stock.

The fronts of these bone piles are ornamented with fancy work in bones. "The designs in skull, leg, arm and thigh bones are wired together. A gentleman in front of me kept saying: "How tasty! These French people can't represent their artistic instincts anywhere." Well, each one to his taste. I couldn't admire it. Filagree work in skulls and thigh bones is weird, but not in the strictest sense ornamental. Cornices and friezes of human skulls, even in a sepulcher, suggest a home, and a sort of osseous cannibalistic taste in the fine art. However, it doesn't hurt the bones, and perhaps the coming man will become so heart-hardened by continuous application of science and reason that he will freeze his parlor with the polished skulls of generations of ancestors.—Pretence Mulford, in San Francisco Chronicle.

LOUISE MICHEL, the famous French communist, was born in Paris, but of Belgian parents who had lived in Valenciennes, and who returned there after her birth. Her father, who had once been a soldier in the armies of Holland, served subsequently as a clerk in a porcelain shop in Paris. Louise in her youth was a teacher, orthodox and pious.

"I believe, after all," exclaimed Peterjohn, impatiently, "that a man is never so happy as when he is making a fool of himself." "I must needs respect your superior wisdom," replied Fred, quickly. "And, great Scott! how you must have enjoyed yourself through life, Peterjohn!"

THE SOLDIERS' SERVICE.

The Gathering of Militiamen at the Congregational Church Yesterday Morning—Rev. T. P. Mawin's Sermon.

In accordance with announcement, a service was held at the Congregational church yesterday morning, having special reference to Decoration day. There being no public observance of the day here, the idea of such a service on the Sunday preceding was very fitting, and the service as held proved to be very appropriate. The church was very becomingly decorated with flags and flowers. From the center of the gallery hung the company flag of the Guards, and around the arched doorways were flags. At the other end of the church the pulpit appeared wrapped about by the national colors, while in front of it appeared a cross and other floral adornments. Upon the platform were stands of plants and upon each side were flags, while in the orchestra appeared a pyramid of cut flowers, and hanging baskets of ferns.

The Bower City Rifles, under command of Captain La Grange, and the Janesville Guards, under command of Captain Smith, appeared in full uniform and occupied pews well to the front. A large congregation was present, and the attention of all was held closely.

The choir prepared special music for the occasion, and among the pieces worthy of mention were the opening anthem, "Thine, O Lord, is the Greatness," Keller's American hymn, and "America."

The pastor, Rev. T. P. Sawin, who is also chaplain of the Rifles, preached a very excellent sermon, one of his best, and one which held the attention of his hearers from beginning to close.

The text chosen was Second Chronicles XXXV, 25: "And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah and all the singing men and singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel." He glowingly pictured the courage and loyalty of the Hebrew king, whose death, met in defending his country, was thus celebrated in song and lamentation year after year, and made this a fitting foundation on which to build a memorial for the brave ones who had defended this country, even to the sacrifice of life.

The speaker, while not wishing to revive issues already passed away, still urged that there was a deeper and holier reason for decorating the graves of the fallen heroes than to pay tribute merely to their bravery. Valor might dwell in the breast of tyranny and treason. Neither was it to pay tribute alone to self-sacrifice, for that might be shown in devotion to a false idea, and when this shown was entitled to pity and charity, but not to honor or esteem.

Neither was it victory alone which was to be praised, for success might wreath a crown for an ignoble brow. To honor qualities which might belong to all men without respect to the governing incentive was to ignore all the moral distinctions, which must be preserved in our national life, or we should meet the fate of Judah and Israel, Greece and Rome, of Babylon and Assyria. There was a gulf fixed between loyalty and treason, and as the Israelitish law forbade the mingling of divers threads in cloth, so an unwritten law forbade the union of that represented on the battle field by the blue and the gray. He who wore the gray was brave and died like a hero, and on any other day the speaker would not hesitate to scatter flowers on his grave, administer comfort to the mourning friends, and say peace to his ashes, but the color he wore marked him as an enemy to the country he was bound to defend. It was the sign, not of cowardice, or weakness, but of sin against the land he was bound to defend. The blue triumphed, not because of the strongest battalions, but because it was the sign of truth and loyalty, freedom and justice.

He believed that in no way could peace and union be so thoroughly fixed as by hiding from sight every reminder of disloyalty, every sign of treason, and every remnant of the confederacy, and bringing out in clear light all that testified to the consolidated republic and supremacy of the nation.

This should be the ever remembered purpose of Decoration day, and it wisely carried out could not fail to heal all the bitterness of the old strife. There was danger of forgetting this. As the day assumed more and more a holiday aspect, the seriousness of its inauguration and the solemnity and tenderness of its import, vanished in noisy demonstrations. Every exercise should be sacred to the memory of the dead, their virtues should be exalted, the confusions of partisan strife and all bitter prejudices should be buried, the frailties of humanity should be remembered with charity, and the resolve should be made that these heroes shall not have died in vain.

Peace was purchased with blood, but it would be in vain, if the principles maintained at such peril, were forgotten. The same danger might not again threaten, but other dangers springing from the same root of selfishness and personal ambitions might arise with as destructive power, in scheming wiles of politicians with no regard for country, in corruptions in office, and violations of trusts. Purity was better than power; honesty than titles of honor. To give force and strength to such notions was the duty of every patriot.

No outward offering could be purer and more fitting than flowers scattered on the graves of the fallen, but still better, that each should resolve to be forever faithful to the noblest ideal of the land, to increase its strength and protect its unity.

DECORATION DAY.

Janesville Sends a Large Representation to Beloit.

The Oration Delivered There by Ogden H. Fethers.

The Procession and Programme.

The observance of Decoration day in this vicinity has its interest mainly centered in Beloit to-day. In accordance with the arrangements made last year the militiamen of the First Battalion went there, and other societies joining them caused the occasion to be more attractive than any which could under the circumstances be arranged here. This forenoon the Bower City Rifles and the Janesville Guards gathered at their armories here, and with the Bower City band at their head marched to the depot, where with many others they packed the cars to their utmost capacity, and rolled off for Beloit. This showing of soldiery was about the only feature of Decoration day here.

The Knights of Pythias also went to Beloit, though they did not go in a body, but with the expectation of forming and mounting there, and joining in the parade. Many of our citizens went also, so that Janesville was well represented in Beloit to-day, and formed no small portion of the procession. Delavan and Whitewater were also represented by their military companies and by a goodly number of their citizens.

The officers of the day were: Dr. H. P. Strong, President; Rev. Levi Parmelee, Chaplain; Col. O. C. Johnson, Marshal.

The following is the order of the procession:

Bower City Band.

First Battalion, W. N. G.

Veterans.

Fire Department.

Students of Beloit College, school children and citizens on foot.

Knights of Pythias, mounted.

Decorators in carriages.

Speakers, chaplains and singers, in carriages.

Mayor and Aldermen in carriages.

Citizens.

The graves of those who fought in the war of the rebellion, and who are buried in the city cemetery number 37, and in the Catholic cemetery four, and there are also five graves of soldiers of the war of 1812.

The oration of the day was delivered by Ogden H. Fethers, Esq., of this city, who spoke as follows:

On him who guards the light—whether in the cloister or in the camp—rests the blessing of the Infinite Tenderness. Upon the head of him whose soul goes out in honest strife at country's call—whether upon the bloody field or in the prison pen—rests the martyr's crown, no less than on the brow of him whose faith in God defies the flames.

Into this sacred place we come to-day—not in the vanity of triumph but with reverent hearts—to lay the emblems of our love upon the graves of those who battling won the blessing, and dying gained the crown.

Beneath these "low green tents whose curtains never unfold swing" rest in never ending peace the mightiest monarchs of the world's history. Though scepterless and silent their empire is supreme in the hearts of countless millions. Unknown by name or individual act, save to the few, yet by one accord to them is given the reverent homage of a Nation's boundless love and grateful tears. Glad subjects to their royal worth no need from us of vow renewed or pledge of willing fealty. And yet how strange, when we reflect, it seems to us that but a little time ago these wearers of the crown walked by our side and looked into our faces; spoke the same familiar tongue and wrought at the same homely tasks; were vexed by the same petty cares and fed by the same food when the fires of patriotic devotion transformed these simple toilers of our untaxed and unthanked days—and now how poor and mean become the warriors and demigods of the far-off time when measured by the honest worth of these plain men—the heroes of our later life.

What need is there to tell to-day of that grand uprising of a million freemen which compelled the world's applause? What need to tell of rifle pit and treacherous bog? of hurrying storm of shot and shell? of days of toilsome march and nights beneath the stars? What need to tell of battles fought, of ghastly wounds, and countless forms of death? No need of these to-day, for the lessons taught by them are written on every heart and burned into every patriot brain.

But is it to the martyred dead alone that we shall yield the tribute of our veneration and our tears? Is there not a part of the mighty lesson of the last twenty years still unlearned? Is there not a page whose types are still unread? or if read, not read aright? Is the sacred debt we owe paid by these our honors to the dead alone?

Keeping watch and ward I see about me here a thousand men who sought with these—whose praise we sing with loud acclaim to-day—the martyr's crown in the fierce heart of battle, but living failed to attain its glory; comrades of these most glorious dead on many a field of carnage. I see them standing here with tear-dimmed eyes among these graves, busy with the memories of other years. Dear old companions, tried and true, yours is not the crown maybe, but as surely as God is on your heads rests His blessing! With sword and buckler laid aside, with all the old-time tasks renewed, unaided by the sound of arms and the tramp of marching feet, in these living herds of fifty fights for Liberty, we see our old familiar friends.

Once more I lift my eyes, and, standing here with bated breath beside the tombs of those whose glad smiles made sunlight in their hearts, I see the wistful, tender eyes of mothers and of wives, the paths of whose patient sacrifice is sweet and pitiful—so full of pain and heartbreak—so full of bitter anguish and fierce hunger of the longing for husband, son, or father, who never more will come in loving strength to laugh away the tears that kiss the cheek—never, nevermore. Martyrs too are they though living on and reading o'er all memory's fond records, have received the blessing, and who surely wear the crown; for better the warrior dead than she who, weeping, waits and watches for the coming that shall never be.

Here too are they who toiled in workshop and in mill; at the forge and at the desk; and in a million fields rich with the golden glow of the shiny harvest. Hand in hand they wrought with those who marched to the sound of fife and drum; hand in hand with those who kept the faith in works of charity and love as well as earnest prayer; hand in hand with sunny childhood, whose silvery laugh and startled eyes brought hope oftentimes to drive away despair.

To our sacred cause each gave what best he could; so let not even him who could only speak the kindly word be unremembered here to-day.

There is a story told that "in some strange land and time they were about to found a bell for a midnight tower—a hollow, starless heaven of iron. It should toll for dead monarchs 'The king is dead,' and should make glad clamor for the new prince, 'Long live the king.' It should proclaim so great a passion or so grand a pride that either would be worship; or wanting these, forever hold its peace. Now this bell was not to be dug out of the cold mountains; it was to be made of something that had been warmed by a human touch and loved with a human love. And so the people came, like pilgrims to a shrine, and cast their offerings into the furnace and went away. There were links of chains that bondsmen had worn bright, and fragments of swords that had broken in heroes' hands; there were crosses and rings and bracelets of fine gold; trinkets of silver and toys of poor red copper. They even brought things that were licked up in an instant by the red tongues of flame; good words they had written and flowers they had cherished—perishable things that could never be heard in the rich tone and volume of the bell. And by and by when the bell awoke in its chamber the great waves of its music rolled gloriously out and broke along the blue walls of the world like an anthem; and every tone in it was familiar as a household word to somebody, and he heard it and knew it with a solemn joy. Poured into that fiery heat together, the humblest gifts were blent in one great wealth, and accents, feeble as a sparrow's song, grew eloquent and strong; and lo, a people's stately soul heaved on the waves of its mighty voice.

As we shall go from out this hallowed place to mingle in the quest and strife of life, let there be some new vow, some silent promise made—born of the holy memories of this day—that in all the coming years and until we join our martyred dead for final muster be the King of kings, no thought, or word, or deed, shall profane the Temple whose altars smoke with the blood of our costly sacrifice. Then shall come to us the voice of untold generations yet to be who shall guard our Nation's honor: Even as these glorious heroes fought the fight, we will surely, surely, keep the faith.

SELLS' SHOW.

The big tents pitched here Saturday by Sells brothers were thronged both afternoon and evening, and the varied shows there grouped delighted all. The menagerie contained many wonders of land and sea, which were explained in an interesting and instructive way by Prof. Moody who is so well known here as to need no introduction. The crowds which gathered around the cages were wonderfully pleased with the showing of rare specimens from the animal kingdom, and all pronounce this feature of the show, a grand one. The ring had no less attractions, and the performance there was very fine. The programme was a varied and exciting one and well spiced with fresh bits of fun from the clowns. The riding was very good, and the athletic feats were the best ever seen under canvas in this city. The trained oxen, the wire and rope walking, the contortionist, and other features were as advertised, and the whole made one of the most enjoyable entertainments of the kind ever given here, and one which created much enthusiasm in the great audiences there gathered, and called forth from all sides words of high praise. Sells brothers have added to their reputation by the excellency of their show this season, and merit the success with which their efforts to please the public are being met.
